

Worksite Wellness:

Is your company healthy?

With health insurance rates continuing to soar, employers are constantly looking for opportunities to positively impact health care costs. One area of debate continues to be the subject of wellness programs. Do they work? A lot? A little? Or are they a waste of employers' time and money? This seminar will examine the relative value of a wide range of wellness models, focusing on what has historically worked well and what has not! The discussion will include real life experiences of local employers.

David Honnicutt, Ph.D., President of the Wellness Council of America (WELCOA), will discuss this and other related, relevant topics. If you have asked yourself any of the following questions, you will benefit from this seminar:

- How do I get my employees more involved with their health?
- What is the impact of employee health and productivity on my company's bottom line?
- What are other employers doing with worksite wellness?
- What results have other employers achieved with these types of initiatives?

Knowing that this seminar may impact many employers' most important asset (their employees), we encourage you to register as soon as possible for this event as seating will be limited.
